"Spunk"
By Zora Neale Hurston – Adapted by George C. Wolfe
Music by Chic Street Mam – Directed by Andre Lee Ellis

“The show – three pre-World War II
Vignettes of African – American life filtered through Hurston’s black, oenery and feminist sensibility –
has class, wit and passion…
This is a great show…
Another tantalizing taste of the
No longer forgotten
Zora Neale Hurston.”

A Partnership with the Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Center
After roaming nomadically for many seasons, Andre’ Lee Ellis & Co. finally has a home. “It’s just like Downtown,” says Andre Lee Ellis, the theater company’s namesake, proud to show visitors around the Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Community Center (1531 W. Vliet St.), a County Parks facility with a 200-seat theater and space for rehearsals and offices. Ellis’ own office is a crowded room that sometimes doubles as a day-care center for his 2-year-old grandson. Since moving to the King Center in January, Andre’ Lee Ellis & Co. might have the honor of being the only African-American performing arts group in Wisconsin with a venue it can call its own.

No one can say Ellis hasn’t paid his share of dues. He began performing as a 7-year-old soloist at Jericho Missionary Baptist Church and sang with R&B bands as a teenager. In 1983 he took the stage as an actor with Hansberry-Sands, Milwaukee’s longest-running black theater company. “From there I never stopped working in the theater,” he says.

But it wasn’t until he moved to New York in 1987 that the scales fell from his eyes. “I had no idea of the multitude of African-American artists in the city,” he explains. “In Milwaukee there are very few opportunities for black artists. In New York, I met black artists taking acting classes, black artists on Broadway, black artists founding their own companies or working with white or Hispanic companies.” Ellis moved on to Atlanta where he gained additional experience with Jomandi Productions as telemarketing director and pitchman as well as an actor. “It was all grooming me for what I do today,” he says.

Aside from three seasons with a black theater in Phoenix, Ellis has been back in town since 1993, first as Hansberry-Sands’ artistic director and then with his own group. Andre’ Lee Ellis & Co. started out of an office in the Milwaukee Enterprise Center “with just a phone on the floor” and debuted with a three-night run of Ellis’ own production, Sho’ Nuff Gospel Music, at Vogel Hall. “We were always scrambling to find a place to do shows and a place to rehearse,” he recalls. “We had no stability. And the real problem was money. Funding sources didn’t know how to take us.”

With a place of his own, Ellis can focus less on logistical and financial headaches and more on his mission. “The true meaning of theater is to raise the consciousness of the people who view it and do it,” he says. “I used to think I needed to be Downtown, but I’m no longer interested in that. I’m interested in stimulating the economic and social life of my community and in doing work for people from various walks of life. I’m hoping people will get a greater understanding of black history through our productions. When the lights go down, we’re all the same color.”

Andre’ Lee Ellis & Co.’s season begins with an adaptation of Zora Neale Hurston’s Spunk, Sept. 24-Oct. 3, at the Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Community Center, 1531 W. Vliet St. A $50 gala season opener will be at the King Center on Sept. 23. For more information, call (414) 544-6352.

Research has shown that chronic stress decreases efficiency in the workplace and increases the number of “sick days” that employees take.

Doctors are recommending yoga to their patients and large corporations are offering lunchtime yoga classes for their employees. So what’s so great about yoga? And just what is it anyway?

Yoga is a scientific system of practices that draws on many ancient and modern traditions. Yoga combines physical stretching and toning exercises with deep breathing, relaxation and meditation techniques for lowering stress. Yoga strengthens the body, soothes the spirit, quiets the mind and restores a sense of peace and well being to our lives. And it feels great!
